"How to cultivate conditions for "givers" to excel" — Victoria Atkinson White

Effective leaders help givers avoid burnout and create institutional cultures where seeking help is the norm, writes the managing director of grants at Leadership Education at Duke Divinity.

It's better to give than to receive. Or is it?

According to Adam Grant, the world is made up of three kinds of people: givers, takers and matchers.

Givers are others-focused and do not expect anything in return for their generosity. Givers freely offer their time, energy, resources and connections.

Takers see their needs as more important than others' and the world as competitive. Takers will help others, but they do so strategically, to ensure that they reap the greatest benefit.

Matchers value fairness and work toward an equality of giving and taking. They operate with a "you scratch my back and I'll scratch yours" mentality.

In ministry, many of us pride ourselves on being givers. We claim we are called to give, citing the Bible: "Do unto others" and "From whom much is given, much is expected." We take courses in seminary on how to give pastoral care and give a good sermon. Ministry is about giving, right?

Givers often sacrifice themselves to make their organizations better. Grant writes that the more often people are helping, teaching, sharing and mentoring, the better their organizations do in every measurable metric. This sounds like the narrative we tell ourselves in pursuit of "success" in ministry. We call it "sacrifice for the greater good." But before you classify yourself in what sounds like the category of champions, you might be surprised to learn that across a vast span of occupations, givers themselves consistently rank among the least successful people. On average, givers earn less money, are less powerful and are more likely to be victims of crime.

So what does this say for those of us who feel called to give of ourselves for the sake of others?

Grant's research continues to surprise. While givers fall at the bottom of the success ladder, they also stand at the top. The workers who are the most productive in both quality and quantity are givers. They create on average up to 50 percent more revenue than takers or matchers.

The question then becomes: How do leaders cultivate the conditions for the givers in their organizations to excel? How do we help them rise and stay at the top of the success ladder rather than drop to the bottom? Grant has some suggestions.

First, help givers avoid burnout. Constantly helping others can be time-consuming and energy-depleting. Grant writes that through entrepreneur Adam Rifkin's notion of the "five-minute favor," givers can build rich collaborative networks and maintain healthy boundaries. We can teach our givers to ask, "How can I add value to someone's life in five minutes or less?"

This idea has dramatically changed the way I spend my time in airports and on airplanes. While I used to pack books and magazines to read in short time spurts, I now strategically use my travel time for five-minute favors.

At my airport gate, I pull out a running list of people and ideas I want to remember. Who among my acquaintances would benefit from being connected? I introduce them via email. Who deserves or needs to be noticed? Sometimes I write an email, but more often, because it is a fading art form, I write a note and mail it. (All airports have mail slots!) What resources do I know about -- grants, scholarships, programs, events -- that would benefit those I just visited? What have I learned recently that should be shared with others? Emails and social media posts, likes and shares are quick and effective ways to communicate these simple connections.

Second, Grant suggests that leaders cultivate a culture of seeking help. Organizations where asking questions and seeking help are the norm have more givers.

I recently visited a church where the pastor urged congregants to hold the offering plate a moment before passing it on to the next person -- even if we didn't have a contribution to put in. "These plates are symbols of the way we see ourselves and our resources in this community," he said. "These plates are not only for those who give; they are for those who receive, because as followers of Jesus Christ, we are called to do both."

When the plate came to me, I felt its weight, not because of the overflowing gifts within it, but because I felt the conviction of needing to become a better receiver so that I might in turn become a better giver. I am working on this.

I recently had the privilege of holding a baby at an event I was co-facilitating. It was the first time the baby's young mother had left the house since giving birth, and she was nervous about how to handle all the details of traveling with an infant and trying to be fully present at an event. It was an enormous treat for me to get to hold, rock and feed this beautiful baby so her mom could receive a few hours of intellectual stimulation, feedback and socialization. While the mother felt that I was giving her a tremendous gift, I felt that I was the one who received. But the cycle was not complete.

The next day, she texted and asked what I would like from Starbucks. My gut reaction was to thank her and tell her I was fine, that the last thing she needed was to leave her house five minutes early or spend money on me. And then I thought about the offering plate. I texted her back and later enjoyed the best skinny vanilla latte I have ever tasted. She gave; I received. We were both happy.

Givers are critical to an organization's success and healthy relationships. Christian institutional leaders must cultivate the conditions for givers to thrive, in a culture of generative giving and receiving.

Article written by Victoria Atkinson White, Managing Director of Grants at Leadership Education at Duke Divinity

The Rev. John Hau'oli Tomoso will be training all Eucharistic Ministers (EMs) and Eucharistic Visitors (EVs) from this parish and all the other Episcopal Church Parishes on Maui on Saturday, May 13th, 9:00am—11:30am, Entitled "Called To Serve", this training, when completed, will lead to the Diocesan License that is required of all EMs and EVs.

In the First Letter of Peter, it is written:
As each has received a gift, employ it for one another, as good stewards of God's varied grace: whoever speaks, as one who utters oracles of God; whoever renders service, as one who renders it by the strength which God supplies; in order that in everything God may be glorified through Jesus Christ. - 1 Peter 4:10-11

EMs and EVs share their gifts with parishioners who want to receive our Lord's Body and Blood, in the Eucharist, both at the Liturgy and, if they can't come to church, at their home or other residence. In the Baptismal Covenant fond on pages 304 and 305 of the Book of Common Prayer, each of us is asked "Will you continue in the apostles' teaching and fellowship, in the breaking of the bread, and in the prayers?" The answer is "I will, with God's help." EMs and EVs answer the Covenant, and the Call of our Lord, through their ministry to us, the church at prayer, especially when gathered around the Lord's Table at the Eucharist.

Please call and register with Cora at the parish office, if you would like to attend the training and to be licensed as a Eucharist Minister (EM) and/or a Eucharistic Visitor (EV) in and for our parish.

Called to Transformation
ABCD Facilitator Formation Workshop 2017
June 8 - 10, 2017, 10:00am—4:00pm
The Cathedral of St. Andrew, Honolulu

"…our mission is not something [God] will reveal; it is something [God] has already revealed. It is not written in the sky; it is to be found written in our members." --Richard Bolles, *How to Find Your Mission in Life

Called to Transformation is a partnership between The Episcopal Church and Episcopal Relief & Development. The workshops were developed to train facilitators in leading a faith community in understanding ABCD. Participants will learn about the theory and practice of ABCD work, and then begin the process of creating a working plan to implement an ABCD project in their own ministry communities.

Leading the workshop are Sean McConnell, Director of Engagement for Episcopal Relief & Development and the Rev. Shannon Kelly, Officer for Young Adult and Campus Ministries for The Episcopal Church and a member of the Presiding Bishop's staff.

Asset-Based Community Development engages communities at a grassroots level to recognize local assets – such as people, buildings, relationships and even faith – and creatively envision how to use that abundance to achieve goals and imagine new forms of ministry. Sean McConnell, Episcopal Relief & Development's Senior Director of Engagement said, "ABCD brings people together to transform their communities. It focuses on the gifts and strengths of individuals, congregations and organizations. By recognizing their own gifts, people are empowered to more deeply invest in achieving the shared goals of the community."

HUI PU 2017

Our theme this year is S.W.A.G

Saved With Amazing Grace

We've all got SWAG, share some of your awesomeness and join us. This will be a week of praise and thanksgiving for Unconditional Love with other campers your age!!!

If those aren't enough reasons, here are 3 reasons why you should join us!

1.) Take a break : swap your daily routine for an awesome camp experience.

2.) New experiences: Can you say that you've leaped off a platform 30ft off the ground or got a pat on the back for beautifully smooshing pie on a counselor's face? Check off one or both, this summer!

3.) Transformation: For my parents reading this, two words, " Controlled Independence!" Campers can learn a little independence while having plenty of adult supervision.

2017 Barrio Fiesta

May 26 & 27, 2017

Binhi At Ani Filipino Community Center

This year the event will be a Friday night and all day Saturday event. We will again be serving our delicious Chow Fun. Volunteers are needed for cooking, cashiering, taking orders, and working the food station.

Your assistance in presale of chow fun tickets ($8.00 presale tickets/$9.00 without a ticket) will be greatly appreciated. Gloria Cajigal will be passing out the presale tickets to the congregation. If you have not received your tickets, do not hesitate in letting her know or call the parish office. Monetary donations (payable to Good Shepherd Church) towards the purchase of supplies and ingredients or donate the items needed is also requested: Paper products, fresh chow fun noodles, ground pork, carrots, bean sprouts, oyster sauce, green onions, shoyu, canola oil. If you would like to donate, please contact Gloria Cajigal (276-3238) or the parish office, 244-4656.

We greatly appreciate everyone's assistance and support to make this another successful event!
